SHARP RELEASES SLIMLINE DVD RECORDER

In a timely move this month, thanks to revelations that DVD is now more popular than TV, Sharp Corporation of Australia released its first slim-line DVD recorder with Hard Disc.

The DVHR300X is a must for home entertainment buffs, featuring DVD recording, playback and storage while also providing a hard disk recording facility, DVD dubbing and MP3 decoder for playing CDs recorded in MP3 mode.

Enjoy high speed dubbing, G-Code function and simultaneous recording and playback features as well as editing functions, as just a few of the amazing features on the DVHR300X.

Utilise the special disc navigator function for instant thumbnail viewing of your favourite recorded programs on hard disc. Sharp has also ensured quality through its LSI jitter-free recording and four different recording modes; fine, LP, SP and EP.

The hard disk has a 80Gb storage capacity, storing approximately 100 hours in EP, 67 hours in LP, 33 hours in SP and 20 hours in fine modes.

The high speed dubbing function allows you to record a one-hour program in 30 minutes in fine mode, 15 minutes in SP, eight minutes in LP and five minutes in EP modes.

Once recordings are finalised, they can be used on most DVD players and DVD Rom drives, meaning entertainment can be taken anywhere and watched anytime, and cannot be accidentally recorded over. The DVHR300X is also re-writeable DVD compatible.

The DVHR300X's audio capabilities include Dolby Digital output, MPEG audio, Spatializer sound, DTS and linear PCM audio.

The DVHR300X's also has the ILink function, which not only allows you to connect your DV Camcorder, but the picture quality is second-to-none and the hard disc makes editing your precious memories much easier.

All of this Sharp performance comes in a portable slim-line design, which is only 59mm high and 5.1 kilograms in weight.
